Mission
The Department of History recognizes and approaches diversity as a complex and long-term project that should inform and transform everything we do. To address injustices and oversights of the past and the present, we aim to attract and retain different populations and communities in our faculty, staff, and student body. We also stress the need to offer a diverse intellectual program, including an ongoing discussion of our curriculum and pedagogy to enhance the quality and range of our graduate and undergraduate education.

Many faculty and graduate students in History are engaged with questions of how class, disability, ethnicity, gender, race, religion, and sexuality have shaped social relations and power dynamics across different time periods and geopolitical contexts. Beyond our scholarship, we realize that these are questions relevant to our immediate setting in the Department of History. As we attempt to cultivate a sense of collaboration and a climate of inclusion, we encourage all faculty, staff, and graduate students to reflect on our individual roles and Department policies and practices, pay careful attention to unequal access and power dynamics in and outside the classroom, and strive to promote equity in all aspects of our work.

Primary Objectives
The primary objectives of the Diversity Committee are to initiate and facilitate an ongoing conversation around the wide range of issues related to diversity and to propose measures to address institutional disparities. In addition to organizing and hosting workshops, seminars, and more informal gatherings, the committee works with the Chair, the Director of Graduate Studies, the Director of Undergraduate Studies, and various Department committees to make sure issues of diversity are made central to all facets of our department's work.

Consisting of two faculty, two graduate students and two staff members, the Diversity Committee also serves as a discrete resource for students, staff, and faculty who have concerns related to climate and diversity. Any member of the department’s learning and working community may contact one or more members of the committee with concerns and questions. Any communication students have with the diversity committee will remain confidential unless the students in question say otherwise.

Upcoming Diversity (DIV) Courses in the Department of History:

The University requires all undergraduates to take a minimum of 3 credits, approved by the appropriate school or college, that focus on the sociocultural, political, and/or economic diversity of the human experience at local, regional, or global levels. This requirement is intended to help you develop an understanding of the complexities of living in increasingly diverse and interconnected societies. Courses that fulfill the diversity requirement focus on cross-cultural analysis and communication; and historical and contemporary inequities such as those associated with race, ethnicity, class, sex and gender, sexual orientation, nationality, ability, religion, creed, age, and socioeconomic status. Course activities should encourage thinking critically about topics such as power, inequality, marginality, and social movements, and support effective cross-cultural communication skills.
