Fall 2014 History Lecture Series, "The Great War and the Modern World" Begins Nov 5th

Submitted by Eric W. Johnson on September 12, 2014 - 2:46am

To mark the centenary of the start of the First World War, the History Lecture Series returns this fall with presentations by four of our own faculty members on the topic "1914: The Great War and the Modern World." The lectures will consider themes of domination, integration, and betrayal, the transition from empires to nation-states, the tension between "home fronts" and "battle fronts," and the impact of the Great War on European intellectual traditions.

The lectures will be presented on Wednesdays, 7-8:30pm, in Kane Hall 130 beginning on November 5, 2014 to coincide with Veterans Appreciation Week (November 3-11, 2014).

Fall 2014 Lecture Series Schedule

November 5, 2014, Raymond Jonas: Domination, Integration, and Betrayal

November 12, 2014, Devin Naar: From Empires to Nation-States

November 19, 2014, Jordanna Bailkin: Home Fronts and Battle Fronts

December 3, 2014, John Toews: Cultural Death and Radical Hope
