Michael A. Williams
Adjunct Professor

Contact Information
maw@uw.edu

Fields of Interest
Ancient Christianity  Ancient World  Late Antiquity  Religion  Religion in the Greco-Roman World

Biography
Michael Williams teaches a range of courses on early Christianity and related religious movements in antiquity, including an Introduction to the New Testament, a more specialized course on early Christian gospels (both New Testament and non-canonical gospels) and Jesus of Nazareth, and various undergraduate and graduate lecture classes and seminars on early Christianity and religion in late antiquity. For the Department of Near Eastern Languages & Civilization, he teaches the three-quarter Coptic language series (EGYPT 411, 422, 423). His primary research has been on heterodox movements in the early Christian period (especially the Coptic Nag Hammadi library and related traditions).

Source URL: https://history.washington.edu/people/michael-williams